"The flooding lasted longer and did more damage than anyone expected," King said.

Included on the governor's original call for a special session is discussion of State Bill 206, clarifying the amount of the overall employer tax rate.

Several measures have been added to the special session agenda, including:

- A call to modify Senate Bill 300, which places a prior lien on the mortgages of condominium owners who fail to pay maintenance fees owed to owner's associations.
- A proposal to repeal the tax benefit from methanol-based synthetic fuel.
- Consideration of a measure to balance the state budget for fiscal 1983.

• A proposal to remove the Division of Corrections from the Social Services Department and make it a separate state agency responsible directly to the governor.

Any special session of the Legislature is limited by state law to 30 days or less. If lawmakers fail to finish all business on the session agenda within 30 days, Gov. Matheson could call another special session, but that is unlikely, King said.

The governor hopes the Legislature can finish with all business and end the special session within three weeks, she said.

Utah law states that only the governor can call a special session of the Legislature, and gives him power to set the agenda. Debate during special sessions is limited to those items placed on the agenda by the governor.

More construction planned I-15 gets second dike

Dikes protecting Interstate 15 in Utah County are expected to be completed by the Utah Department of Transportation today.

According to L.R. Jester, District 6 director of the UDOT, the new dikes were constructed 12 feet wide and six feet high and cost about $250,000. The dikes extend two feet above the present level of Utah Lake.

The dikes have to be strong enough not to be damaged if a car goes out of control and runs into them, said Sven Nielson, Provo Police chief.

Height increased

The height of the dikes will be increased if Utah Lake continues to rise, Jester said. Heavy equipment will be able to be used on top of the dikes for the making of any emergency repairs. Water at the lake has been rising about an inch a day.

UDOT officials have also considered the possibility of raising the entire section between the University Avenue access ramp and the Springville exit.

The cost of raising the interstate would be about $18 million because that section includes two overpasses that would need to be raised," Jester said.

Raising the highway level by two feet would not allow large trucks and trailers to pass under the overpasses unless the overpasses were raised an additional two feet.

Crews will continue to clean debris around the dikes until Saturday.

The new dikes will have to be pumped after every rainstorm, Jester said. Rainwater will accumulate on the inside of the dikes because of the freeway runoff.

Unusual year

"Normally, we do not have many rainstorms that hit this time of year, but this has not been an average year," Jester said.

The onramp at University Avenue has also been reopened. The ramp was closed because the water at Utah Lake reached such a high level that water began to bubble up through the onramp pavement.

The UDOT raised the level of the onramp by four feet. "We plan on letting out a contract to pave the onramp within 90 days," he said. "People accept highway repairs when there's an emergency but later, when it's dry and dusty, they will be upset with dirt ramps."

Money to pay for the improvements will be sought from a special session of the Utah State Legislature, which meets Thursday in Salt Lake, Jester said.

"If they do not give us the money, it will be diverted from other projects to pay for the repairs," he said.

A special dust-guard material will be put on the onramp to help it retain moisture until the paving process has been completed.

ASBYU loses attorney general after agreement

By CONNIE THORNTON
Staff Writer

The ASBYU Attorney General resigned Wednesday afternoon, said Robyn Patton, director of public relations for ASBYU.

It was understood when Jeff Payne accepted the office in May that he would resign at the end of spring term, Patton said.

"It's not a big deal," she said. "Jeff's resignation is a result of an agreement made with Greg (Fullmer)."

Payne could not be reached before press time, but Patton stated that Payne was concerned about how his resignation would be presented.

"The resignation is not because of grades, nor is it because Jeff has lost his desire to work with ASBYU," Patton said.

A new attorney general will be appointed at the beginning of summer term, she said.

When Payne's appointment was approved by the ASBYU Executive Council in May, ASBYU President Greg Fullmer told The Universe that Payne's appointment was only temporary.

At that time, Fullmer said the appointment was temporary because Sam Cowley, a BYU student who was serving his internship in Washington, D.C. during spring term, would not be able to accept the position until he returned.

Cowley may be a candidate for the position, Patton said, but no decisions have been made yet.

"I don't know whether Jeff will continue to work in the attorney general's office or not. He wants to stay involved," Patton said. "Greg may have another position for him."

The people whom Payne has appointed will continue in their positions, Patton said. Payne has appointed two commons court judges, a head student defender and a supreme court justice to serve in the ASBYU court system.

Patton does not see any transition problems within the attorney general's office. "The office is already established. One person will just be over it now," she said.

Since the new attorney general will take office at the beginning of summer term, he will have time to get his feet on the ground before fall, Patton said.

Bushman is only one of Provo's southeast residents who has basement run water to the driveway. Damage to this home is estimated at $5,000.

Gov. Scott Matheson has promised monetary aid for all Utah canyons. Ferguson did not say when these monies would be made available.

Zirbes said although city funds have not been specifically budgeted for the Slate Canyon flooding problem, this should not prevent Provo from taking the necessary steps now.

Maetani's neighbor, Preston Bushman, echoed the fears of many of the area residents. Bushman said underground flooding is a problem from Provo Elementary School, east of the Provo City Cemetery, to as far north as 260 South.

Bushman said he is pumping 3,400 gallons from his basement every hour with two pumps he had to buy for $200 each.

Bushman's son, David, said he fears the consequences if electrical power should fail.

"It only takes 12 seconds for the hole to fill and start overflowing onto the floor," David said. He calculates it would only take three hours for water to fill the basement completely and spill out through window wells.

Electrocution is a very real danger in the Bushman basement, David said. Should the pumps stop for any reason, the water level would reach the furnace motor within one hour.

If family members were bailing water when power returned, the situation could prove fatal, he said.

Damage to the Bushman home is estimated at $5,000, David said.

Jerry Bushman, 30, of Mapleton, said the ideal long-term solution would be for the city to divert runoff waters through pipes from the mouth of Slate Canyon into several canal systems in southeast Provo or directly into Utah Lake.

The extremely porous ground underneath the basins is causing runoff water to sink into the ground faster than it can drain from the basin above ground, said council member Keith Roos.

Marvin C.J. Kuehar told the council he had conducted a dye experiment to learn how fast water from the Slate Canyon drainage basins is seeping into Provo's School and surrounding homes.

Kuehar, chairman of the Department of Clothing and Textiles at BYU and an experienced research chemist, poured five gallons of dye solution into the third basin and found traces of it in the school and homes seven days later.

Weekend weather threatening

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Predictions of hot weekend weather that could further aggravate Utah's high water problems had flood control officials worried Wednesday, as Utah lawmakers prepared for a special session to figure out how to pay for the state's flood damage.

In eastern Utah, Uintah County crews aided by National Guard trucks fought to save irrigation canals threatened near Vernal, while the emergency services director for Sanpete County warned that flood problems were just beginning for central Utah.

Gov. Scott Matheson said Tuesday he had asked the Federal Emergency Management Agency to make Duchesne and Rich counties eligible for federal disaster aid. The governor said he also planned to ask that Uintah County be added to the eligibility list.

Already 18 of the state's 29 counties are able to receive federal help for the widespread damage that's been called the state's worst disaster. Damage to homes, businesses, farms and other property from floodwater and mudslides this spring has been estimated at $200 million to $300 million.

The National Weather Service predicted temperatures in the high 80s to mid-90s through the weekend. Flood control officials fear the hot weather could unleash another round of heavy mountain runoff.

"I'll take 89 degrees, but 90 or 91 could start melting the high snow and cause problems," said Salt Lake County flood control director Terry Holzworth.

"Three or four consecutive days in the 90s will do it," he said. "Right now we are just continuing routine maintenance like dredging canals and cleaning stream banks."

The Utah Legislature meets in special session Thursday, with a major goal of finding a way to pay the state's expected $25 million to $50 million share of the flood bill. State administrative and legislative leaders say they expect a tax increase will be needed.

Uintah County crews worked to protect headworks of two irrigation canals flowing out of Ashley Creek at the mouth of Dry Fork Canyon.

County dispatcher Wallace Calder said a break occurred in one of the canals early Wednesday and water started flowing from the creek into the canal, temporarily cutting off five workers. The men were evacuated unharmed by helicopter.

County spokesman Dee Hall said water was running from the creek across a pasture into the canal. Officials were planning to divert the water back into the creek to prevent the canal from getting overloaded.

Trucks were hauling rocks to the site, and earlier caught riprap to a bridge on Utah 44 where there had been some slippage along the bank of the Ashley Creek.

Pope ends with surprise meetings in hometown

KRAKOW, Poland (AP) — In a surprise climax to his tumultuous Polish homecoming, Pope John Paul II met Wednesday night with Communist Party chief Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski. Solidarity leader Lech Walesa waited in the wings.

Earlier, tens of thousands chanting "Long live the pope!" streamed through this ancient city's streets in a march supporting Walesa's banned Solidarity union.

That demonstration was brought to a peaceful halt by police. Thousands also marched in nearby Nova Huta, where an army of riot police broke up the protest. At least two demonstrators were seized.

It was the final night of an eight-day papal visit that put John Paul at the center of the struggle between restive workers and communist authorities in his homeland.

The pontiff first met Jaruzelski last Friday, when he criticized the imposition of martial law in Poland. Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said Wednesday's unscheduled second meeting was arranged at the request of Polish church officials.

The pope walked to Krakow's Wawel Castle to see the general after taking part in a session of the Krakow Synod of Bishops in nearby Wawel Cathedral. Two government photographers briefly admitted to the pope-Jaruzelski meeting said it lasted 40 minutes.

There was no immediate word on what was discussed.

Walesa, meanwhile, flew in from his home in the northern suburb of Gdansk, reportedly aboard a military aircraft, and was staying at a church in a Krakow suburb.

Two U.S. journalists killed in Honduras, near border

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Honduran authorities said two U.S. journalists and their Honduran driver were killed Tuesday when their car was hit by anti-tank grenades in an attack near the Nicaraguan border.

The foreign Ministry earlier said three newsmen had been killed, but the third man they named — Time magazine correspondent William McWhorter — showed up alive and well in Florida — and Honduran officials later apologized for listing him as one of the killed.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Ricardo Flores said the attack killed Richard Cross, a free-lance reporter on assignment for U.S. News & World Report, and Dial Torgerson, Central American correspondent for the Los Angeles Times, as well as Jose Herrera, 27, the Honduran who was driving the rented car.

"Initial reports had indicated there were three American journalists killed along with an Honduran driver," said ministry spokesman Paz Barnica. "But definitive reports from military intelligence said there were two Americans killed."

"Their bodies were recovered and identified by an Honduran military patrol despite heavy fire from Nicaraguan Sandinista artillery," Paz Barnica said. "We have protested to Nicaragua this criminal aggression against the people of Honduras."

The Foreign Ministry communique said the anti-tank grenades were fired by Nicaraguan soldiers into Honduras from inside Nicaragua.

The communique also said the Honduran government "has reports that the British Broadcasting Corporation, and correspondents of other nationalities, have been in grave danger in the border region," but it gave no details.

Honduran government spokesman Amilcar Santamaria said the men were killed at about 3 p.m. — 5 p.m. EDT — when their car was fired upon by Nicaraguan troops from across the border.

Challenger plays satellite tag game

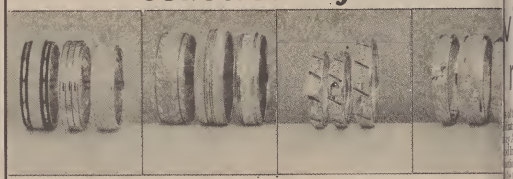

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The shuttle astronauts played a celestial game of tag with a satellite Wednesday, releasing and plucking it back from orbit in a rehearsal for future repair missions. On the ground, bad weather put a Florida landing in doubt and President Reagan canceled plans to attend.

NASA officials had made no decision on allowing Challenger to land as scheduled Friday morning and whether such a landing would be at Cape Canaveral or at Edwards Air Force Base in California, the backup site.

If clouds and thunderstorms persist in Florida, Challenger could remain aloft an extra day or two.

In a day-long aerial ballet at 17,400 mph, astronauts John Fabian, Sally Ride and Dr. Norman Thagard used the shuttle's 50-foot-long arm to release the satellite into space and grab it again five times.

Internships open in Germany

By MANDY JEAN WOODS

man government has offered a chance for students to spend a month in Germany working for the Bundestag government.

BYU was contacted as a result of the seminar program. "We have a reputation as the best of any university representing Capitol Hill. We are unexcelled by any other, and this is common knowledge among those who use interns in Washington."

Another factor was BYU's reputation, as well as the fact that there were so many students here that speak a foreign language, she said.

According to Dr. Rita Edmonds, coordinator of international internships, ten students will be selected to attend the leadership seminar program in Bonn and Berlin this July.

"Any student can apply, but we would prefer senior standing students. They should also be fairly fluent in German," she said. "BYU credit will be arranged for students who go. Edmonds said the German government was sponsoring the trip and would pay all expenses except for the travel to and from Germany, which participating students will have to fund themselves."

As part of the leadership training, students will have the chance to work with top German government leaders and study the inner workings of the German Bundestag, she said.

This program is one of several that are offered to BYU students for study abroad. Edmonds said that this term about thirty students were placed in volunteer internship and service programs around the world.

"For example, there are several students working in embassies in Japan and the Philippines. Some are teaching in foreign language institutes in selected Asian countries and Italy. And there are two students doing community nutrition research in Bedouin wards in Israel," she said.

Anyone interested in the German program or other selected placements should contact Dr. Rita Edmonds, at ext. 3377 Kennedy International Center.

Provo man leads police on chase

A Provo motorcycle led four patrol cars from two law enforcement agencies on a chase through the streets of northeast Provo on Monday afternoon before he was caught.

Stephen Anderson, 21, 3658 N. 760 East, was apprehended at his home about 4 p.m. after Utah Highway Patrol and Provo Police officers chased his motorcycle through the neighborhood of Quail Valley Drive and Foothill Drive, said Provo Police Capt. Max Littlefield.

Anderson appeared in 8th Circuit Court on Tuesday and pleaded guilty to a charge of reckless driving. He was fined $299 and sentenced to six months in jail, said Eileen Jensen, spokeswoman for the court clerk's office.

Jensen said Anderson's jail sentence and all but $100 of his fine were suspended.

Riviera files Chapter 11 reorganize financially of the Riviera Apartments have filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Inc., owners of the apartment complex, filed June 15 with the bankruptcy court in Salt Lake City.

Chapter 11 filing allows the present managers to operate the apartment reorganizing the complex's finances, also be given time to prepare financial statements for the bankruptcy court, according to Lately, deputy clerk for the bankruptcy court in Salt Lake City.

John G. Mulliner, attorney for Garwood Inc., said the finances of the apartments are solvent. He also said no change in operations or management are planned for the complex.

Lately said debtors named in such a reorganization are required to prepare monthly statements until a hearing is set to determine the outcome of the action.

If the debtors' request for the reorganization is approved by creditors, the reorganization will be approved by the court. Lately said the hearing will probably be set for the end of July.

Rock star goes Christian time instructor of ancient scripture at New Zealand rock group became aware of a spiritual need in Gileadi, a convert to The Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said he was "being more than human. I was comfortable with this image because it was based on truth. It seemed idolatry."

When he saw people gloating on the floor to music, it seemed they were giving up a portion of their self-discipline and free agency. He gradually made a judgement, based upon his spiritual background, that the lifestyle of a rock musician would be detrimental to his soul. He decided to give up rock music completely.

"I was taking off a worldly crown; it was somewhat humiliating to come off of my 'high horse,' but I did it voluntarily. It was then that I began to be spiritually reborn. The spirit began to influence my life and the scriptures were opened up to my understanding," he said.

Gileadi said rock music is part of a worldly or lesser law. "I think it is very significant that the rock culture is related to drugs and sex. Culture becomes cult when it reaches the dehumanizing stages. It happens to the masses without their discernment. Smut gradually creeps in," he said.

Gileadi's need for spiritual dimension led him to become an Orthodox Jew and a citizen of Israel, where he lived on a kibbutz (a collective farm or settlement) and was tutored by two rabbis. While attending talmudic school in Jerusalem, he began to compose melodies that he later discovered fit to the Hebrew Psalms.

espises new NBA reputation

Ainge terms style 'aggressive'

By JOHN DALRYMPLE
Asst. Sports Editor

Following a fight during the recent National Basketball Association playoffs, former BYU star Danny Ainge is now having to combat the accusations of being a cheap-shot player.

The fight incident and the accusation were a surprise to most of the fans who have followed Ainge's career from the Marriott Center to the Boston Gardens, where he now plays guard for the Boston Celtics.

Ainge, who has returned to Provo for two weeks as a co-sponsor of a local summer basketball camp, has been fielding questions from the Utah media concerning his post-season playoff scuffle and the finger-pointing that followed afterwards.

The trouble began for Ainge during an April playoff game between Boston and Atlanta. According to Ainge, the Celtics felt that Atlanta center Tree Rollins was getting away with a lot more than he should — elbowing Celtic players and setting illegal picks.

Ainge said he wasn't singled out by Rollins, but the Atlanta offense allows the center to set picks on the Celtic guards.

In addition to the illegal picks, Ainge said Rollins had put him in a head lock at one point during the game. "He came down the court and said he was going to really mess me up."

Elbow initiates brawl

Rollins then threw an elbow at Ainge's head. Ainge responded by tackling the center and a brawl commenced.

Ainge justified tackling Rollins as protecting himself from injury and avoiding a possible fist fight. When Ainge and Rollins went down, other players piled on.

Ainge said he had one hand free on the bottom of the pile and tried to push Rollins' head away. Rollins grabbed on to a finger and had it in his mouth for 15 to 20 seconds, biting on it as hard as he could, the former Cougar star added.

Ainge's finger was bitten to the bone and required several stitches.

And as if the fight during the Boston-Atlanta series didn't create enough bad publicity, Ainge was accused of being a cheap-shot player at the beginning of the Milwaukee-Boston playoffs. The accusation came from the Bucks' head coach, who was later fined for the statement.

Disapproves of comment

Ainge said he feels he doesn't have the reputation of a cheapshot, and added that any of the players he played against on the Bucks' team would refute the coach's comment.

"I don't think they believe that," he said. "You can talk to any of those players, and they'll say that I wasn't giving cheap shots. They would disregard the comments."

Ainge said the accusation was simply a tactic to incite the crowd and get the referees to watch him more closely. He said it worked in that regard, but was probably the cheapest shot of all.

"If I hadn't scored 24 points in the first half (of the first game) against them, I don't think one word would have been said."

Aggressive, not dirty

Ainge said he hopes the two incidents will not hurt his future. "I'm not going to change my style. I think I'm an aggressive player, but not dirty. I was only trying to protect myself."

The Celtics recently hired a new head coach, former assistant coach K.C. Jones. Ainge said he thought this would be good for both him and the team.

"I think it might have been time for a change in our organization," he said. "I think the new coach likes me as a player and this will help my career."

Ainge said he hopes to play for at least 10 more years in the NBA, adding that his career depends on remaining healthy.

In the distant future, Ainge said he doesn't have definite plans for another career when he is finished with pro basketball.

"Right now, I would probably say coaching; but 10 years from now, we'll have to see."

and because it is an interesting country," she added.

Michaelis will be taking eight players from her 1982-83 squad that finished in the top 16 in the nation last season. In addition to competing, the players will tour throughout many parts of Europe as representatives of the university and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"We don't know enough about the teams we will be playing to say who will be the strongest competition," Michaelis said. "We will be playing teams who finished in the top three in their country."

"It will be interesting to compare their top collegiate teams with our top collegiate teams," she added.

DePourtales receives top scholarship

BYU's volleyball All-American, Val dePourtales, was selected to the NCAA Postgraduate Scholarship Award program and awarded a $2,000 fund to be used to pursue academic studies at an academically accredited school of her choice.

DePourtales, one of only 10 women athletes in various sports to be given the scholarship, is the first BYU and High Country Athletic Conference female athlete to receive the honor.

A 1983 graduate in economics at BYU, dePourtales is hoping to use her scholarship at Harvard University to earn a master's degree in business administration.

Commentary

Today's youth lack orientation

A growing number of college-bound youth are entering universities with no feeling for what their education will enable them to do after graduation.

One LDS employment counselor said these students fail to associate education with job-related skills. "It's shocking to see how many young students enter adulthood with little direction, no skills, ambiguous goals and no decisive plan to achieve these goals," he said.

Years ago any job-seeker with a college degree could land a well-paying, respectable position with little effort. But the increased accessibility of university education has created a "glut" of intelligent yet undemanding graduates. Moreover, polytechnical institutions have supplied firms with workers directly skilled for high-tech tasks.

The problem is augmented when university students choose fields of education with no demand and little future. For years students with lofty ambitions have majored in such subject areas as education, foreign language or fine arts. This is not to say that careers in these fields are of little value to society; indeed they are a great asset to us all. But the simple economics of supply and demand bring us to the realization that "exiting" majors with few job opportunities will lead us to dead-end paths.

Many a returned missionary arrives at college with pie-in-the-sky ambitions of implementing his foreign-language skills to find a job. He majors in French only to find that the employment lines are filled with four million other French-speaking job seekers. The only job-related position he can find is making French fries at Burger King.

Wayne Hansen, director of the BYU Placement Center, said students can enroll in a career-education class, which makes available employment patterns and job-aptitude tests. All of this is designed to help individuals make the best possible career and major choices. Students in these classes are encouraged to visit with professionals in various careers to determine lifestyles and actual job demands.

Hansen said the job market is best available to those majoring in areas of computer science, physics, engineering and science. He was careful to point out, however, that marketability depends on the individual, not the major. "If a student hasn't enhanced his learning with work experience and related skills, then his chances for employment are greatly reduced."

To have no understanding of what our education will do for us after graduation is like a ship without a carefully charted course. Neither ship nor student will find it easy to steer clear from the rocks.

Merit salary is not solution

This is in response to Paul Stout's editorial (June 16) about teachers' salaries and merit pay. As I read, I again felt the great disbelief that I often do that people can have so little understanding of the public school teacher's plight in this country. No, I do not believe that increased pay will, in general, "cause" current teachers to work harder. That is not the point. The point is that you will find few people who are intelligent, patient, well-trained and able to teach who will submit to working for $15,000 when outside of teaching they could earn $50,000.

Merit pay is a fairly good idea, on the surface, for encouraging well-qualified teachers to continue teaching. Unfortunately, in all the publicity that this battle has had, one important question has been ignored fairly constantly. Just how is merit to be determined? Student grades? Evaluations by students or other teachers? When someone can answer this question with a reasonable, fair and reliable method, I will be a strong supporter of merit pay.

I also take interest in the comment that teaching has so little responsibility. Perhaps Mr. Stout is under the popular impression that teaching is a soft job. I doubt that he would feel this way after spending a few of the 50-60 week weeks common to public school teachers. If this figure sounds unrealistic, try grading homework and tests for the 150-200 students most teachers see each day along with spending seven to nine hours a day at school.

If, as he said, "a servant should be worthy of his hire," I feel also that an employer should be paid for the servant.

Proud defense of the Osmonds

It has always been a problem for me to stand up for the Osmonds without sounding like a teenybopper fan. But after reading Provo's letter in which he criticized the Osmonds for producing the Freedom Festival at BYU this year, I realized that I couldn't possibly sound more immature than he did.

Mr. Randle complained that the stadium show is being held on July 2 instead of on the fourth. He claimed that this was just so the Osmonds could put on another festival in Arizona, celebrating America's birthday on the fourth. He obviously thought the idea of lots of small towns having freedom festivals ridiculous; though I fail to see the humor.

What's so ridiculous about the way the Osmonds are trying to spread patriotism by getting other towns excited enough to start having celebrations like Provo does? I think it's wonderful! In a time when most show-biz groups are spreading messages of rebellion and sex, the Osmonds should be commended for their courage to be different; not belittled for it.

As far as the date change is concerned, Provo's Freedom Festival hasn't been limited to a one-day celebration for quite some time now. It's usually a week-long production with different shows and events the whole time. What's the big deal of the exact date anyway? Does it matter that we celebrate Christ's birthday months earlier than when it actually was supposed to have occurred? Two days is not going to change the event's meaning now. Besides, did it ever occur to Mr. Randle that Saturday plus a picnic in the park on Monday is a double treat? That maybe President Reagan couldn't make it here on the fourth?

He insinuated that the public is being taken advantage of; that perhaps it wouldn't be worth the money, or that we should get it free. The show will take a lot of money to put on. But anyone who went to the Osmond-sponsored show two years ago can verify that it was well worth it. This year's extravaganza promises to be bigger and better than before.

The Osmonds are in business like the rest of us. They work hard at what they do and have large families to support. Why should they always be expected to work for free? I'm sure they try to eliminate expenses as much as possible, and I'm also sure that they're not solely responsible for the ticket prices. (Which I find quite reasonable, considering what we'll get for it.)

As quickly as we forget the many times the Osmonds have donated their time and energy for Utah's benefit. Doesn't anyone remember their two wonderful sellout concerts at BYU in 1982 — the one of which all went to the world? Or if that was too long ago — what about the telephone they produced last month that raised $5 million for children's hospitals? But obviously things like that don't satisfy Mr. Randle. He expects everything handed to him on a silver platter. Give the Osmonds a break!

I can't believe that Mr. Randle had the audacity to claim that he was a fan. With fans like this, who needs enemies? How dare he make fun of the Osmonds' missionary efforts! If it weren't for that family sharing their light, I'd have had no idea what a Mormon was; nor I suspect, would I have cared enough to bother finding out. They've been directly responsible for over 30,000 conversions according to Paul H. Dunn. They've also been praised by other Church authorities, including Elder Marvin J. Ashton and none other than President Spencer W. Kimball himself. Who is Quint Randle to criticize?

Oh, but maybe the Osmonds' new western look bothers him. He mentioned the beard. It's funny — when the Osmonds first started going pop in the early '70s, some self-righteous Latter-day Saints pointed to their slightly longer hair and complained. But time gives us perspective. Five guys with Andy Hardy haircuts singing pop would never have been accepted — only ridiculed.

The Osmond brothers are now playing country music. It's hard enough for country fans to accept the switch and take the Osmonds seriously. Without their new look, they wouldn't stand a chance. They're letting the world know that you can be a Mormon and still have clean fun too. What's wrong with that? When the Osmonds succeed in this country-western role, you can rest assured that many cowhands and "good ol' boys" will be more willing to open their doors to the missionaries, thanks to the example the Osmonds set. The Osmond family doesn't compromise on important standards.

Someone I fail to see Christian qualities in someone who states: "But the Freedom Festival is Provo's celebration! I don't want the rest of the nation to see it, nor pay the ticket price to get in."

I can't believe that anyone could be so self-

Writing line upon line

It's a great thing that many have felt the need to write church-related novels, both fiction and non-fiction.

Now when I get a little fed up with Laman's and Lemuel's bickering with Nephi, I can open up the pages of a "latter-day novel" and see how Sam is handling the challenges of being a missionary at his extremely gentle high school reunion.

Or when the blood and guts of Heleman and his 2,000 stripping warriors gets me down, I can read a few pages of the story of Charly and Agnus, who they met at the "Y" and were married in the temple.

Throughout the year, especially around Christmas time, we are bombarded with advertisements touting the usefulness of books about church members falling in and out of love, in and out of righteousness, and sometimes in and out, then back into, the church itself.

Most of us BYU students have had very little of the best quotes and anecdotes from these books will end up in that LDS best-seller of all time, "Faith Promoting Rumors."

That's the book people are usually quoting from when they can't remember the source of an unusual story or certain obscure doctrine.

Sometimes I wonder whether some of these authors are more concerned with building up the kingdom and reaping their reward, or writing about the kingdom and reaping a profit.

Hopefully you all will understand. I'm not really as upset or mad as I may seem. I'm just letting off a bit of steam that has been building up recently.

In my mailbox yesterday was the latest in a long series of rejection slips that I've been getting in response to THE BOOK I'm diligently trying to get published.

I know it could very well be the next "Saturday's Warrior" but no one has caught the vision.

It's called "The Hymn Singer," and it's about an RM torn between being the ward choir director and singing in a rock 'n' roll band.

He's also entangled in a dangerous love triangle trying to decide between Sally, his "pre-mission" sweetheart, and Bambi, who thinks he's a great pop vocalist and wants to be his agent.

Well, let me tell you about it from the beginning. Before his mission, he used to sing in the ward choir and moonlight as a rock 'n' roller in nightclubs on the Sunset Strip and then . . .

Press necessary to public

"A community needs news," said the English author Dame Rebecca West, "for the same reason that a man needs eyes. It has to see where it is going."

Journalism plays a necessary role in today's modern world. Contrary to popular opinion, it is a vital asset to American society.

Most of us BYU students have had very limited experience with the media, except for occasional exposure as consumers of newspapers, magazines, radio and television broadcasts.

The extent of journalism's power and influence at BYU is obvious — the way a word or phrase often goes unmentioned in the world today.

It is crucial for the public to be aware of what goes on around them aside from their own personal and family lives, because whether for good or bad, journalism can have a tremendous impact upon society.

Consequently, it is the responsibility and the duty of journalists to provide the public with information concerning the society in which they live. Accurate and reliable journalism is a necessity in a modern world where crime and deceit are rampant.

The mass media has the potential to be a contributing force in our country and around the world, yet it also has the power to do more harm than service to the American public as a whole.

Freedom of the press is one of the greatest constitutional rights we, as American citizens, are privileged to enjoy.

Throughout American history, journalism has done much to protect our right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

From the first Federalist Papers and Thomas Paine's "Common Sense" articles, to the Watergate scandal, journalism has played a major part in shaping American history.

All members of the public have a responsibility to be well-informed. Unfortunately, some deny the fact that without a free, unencumbered press this is not possible.

"Despite the handicaps contemporary journalists face in communicating news, there is no excuse for anyone being uninformed on the facts or the multitude of opinions regarding them," said Curtis D. MacDougall, professor emeritus of journalism at Northwestern University.

"You can produce the 100 percent perfect news medium, but if there are only ninecomposts to read it, democracy is still in danger," MacDougall said. "I feel that journalism is still one of the most important of the mass media and it will continue to make great progress in the future if the necessary pains are taken to preserve its integrity."

As long as journalism remains accurate, truthful and unbiased, it will continue to be an influential and beneficial source of service and information.

Y fortunate to possess instructors of religion

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints claims to be the only true and living church on earth.

Missionaries and members relate the story of the first vision in 1820. In this vision a divine light indicated that the religious teachers of that time were wrong, they were corrupt, that they taught the doctrine of man and not the doctrine of God. The LDS church doesn't think too highly of teachers — or the doctrine they teach.

This Church or people believes that a man is called by God by revelation and by the laying of hands by those who are in authority to ordain and administer the ordinances of the Church.

To graduate from BYU, it is a requirement that students to complete 14 credit hours of religion or a member of this school's founding organization or not.

Students must learn about religion from religion teachers who are not "called of God."

The justification of all this being that teachers supposedly teach the doctrines contrary to those who do have and have had proper authority on earth.

It is important to know the details of a particular occupation and also important to know the details of a true religion.

Religion teachers are important specialists in fields of religious study and are the first to admit that they have no authority in their capacity at the university. They do, however, expect direction as to where their authority is found.

We live in a knowledge-building age, where assistance of these instructors can be helpful. An age when people must extend themselves to understand things as they really are and to all aspects of knowledge, religious as well as secular.

Especially members of this student body who are open minded and realize that the course of study can suddenly change, as was the case in the past.

Never should students be dogmatic or unwelcome to change and progress. As a people, members of the Church need to know, not only religiously, but also scientific, governmental, psychological and a multiplicity of information.

A knowledge and understanding of these fields and an open-minded attitude will help promote the cause of the organization that sponsors this university.

It is fortunate for the people of this planet that there are men who have authority from God to instruct, inspire and lead in a continuous doctrine from the source of truth itself.

It is also fortunate for the student body of this university, or any other university with LDS religion teachers, that people have given their lives to promote such a noble cause.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

That he'd object to sharing Provo's patriotism with the rest of the nation via a national broadcast. We should be proud to show America what we've got! Tourism doesn't hurt, does it?

There are beautiful people who deserve support from their fans and neighbors — and this is one fan who wants them to know she's proud and happy that they're doing such wonderful things for Provo and the Church. I consider myself lucky to live in the same town they do.

Osmond pres. refutes opinion

I read with some amusement, and I must admit some anger, the article by Quint Randle concerning the Osmond's involvement in the Freedom Festival.

I recognize that The Daily Universe is a learning experience for your staff, but I think it important for Mr. Randle to check his facts before "firing from the hip."

The Festival is sponsored by the City of Provo. The Freedom Festival Board contacted the Osmonds and asked them to produce the panorama and make it a major national event as a part of "America's Freedom Festival at Provo."

The city receives monies from the ticket sales and uses these dollars to help offset the cost of the week-long festival. For Mr. Randle to suggest that taxpayers' money is being used to finance the event is not only misleading, but totally inaccurate.

I do not understand what Mr. Randle is referring to when he talks about budget figures at $300,000 and revenues at $500,000 and asks where the $200,000 is going. Again, he is completely wrong with his figures.

The Freedom Festival committee has planned a great celebration. The format this year is to end the celebration with a great weekend. The closing festival and grand ball on Friday, the Children's Parade and Panorama on Saturday, the patriotic service on Sunday, the grand parade, picnic in the park and free fireworks in Kiwanis Park on Monday, will truly make this event "America's Freedom Festival."

Thankfully, 50,000 people disagree with Mr. Randle's statement "who want to go fireworks on a hard aluminum seat."

Come on Quint, next time make a sit telephone call and get your facts straight before playing "Don Quixote."

Pedestrians not cautious

I'm beginning to wonder why the university tohers with pedestrian crossings at campus. Some people certainly don't seem to care. You'd almost think they had death wishes.

Recently, as I was pulling into a parking lot just west of the Jesse Knight Building, I had a close encounter with a young walking right through the middle of the cross road — nowhere near a cross walk who got downright indignant when he over to the sidewalk. The unfortunate is with the rush hour traffic, and the time of the event, I didn't see him until it was almost too late. Later that day, when turned by my car, I found a note he obviously left. I could tell he's intelligent, the number of four-letter words he used tell me I shouldn't be allowed on the street.

He didn't seem to realize the danger of being in the wrong place at the wrong time. He assumed the traffic would watch out for him. I'd just like to see how long he'd last if I don't see a one endanger him/herself by ignoring crosswalks.

Jaywalkers are taking a chance by placing the burden for their safety on the police. Even at 20 mph, it's easy to be looking the wrong way at the wrong time. The person who assumes the driver will always see is playing with a time bomb. He's self-suicidal and probably deserves what he gets. I'm not advocating open season on pedestrians. I appreciate them. I'd just like to have a little more respect for their way of life. I always try to respect people's crosswalks, but the door swings both ways.
